Background: In the 1995 legislative session when ESSHB 1908 was enacted into law, the Legislature created both assisted living and enhanced adult residential care services be developed. These services are designed to offer persons who are otherwise eligible for nursing home services a choice of receiving limited nursing services in a licensed boarding home in either a private apartment-like unit or in a semi-private room without the full functional/structural amenities of an apartment-like unit. The two services, assisted living and enhanced adult residential care, not only offer persons a choice in their setting but also were designed to encourage licensed nursing homes and boarding homes to provide such services. In ESSHB 1908, section 2, the Legislature prohibits the Department of Social and Health Services from requiring licensed nursing homes to make structural modifications for the purpose of providing enhanced adult residential care.

Since the passage of ESSHB 1908, only one licensed nursing home has reportedly converted its beds to provide enhanced adult residential care. It has been suggested by nursing home administrators that the reasons for the lack of enhanced adult residential care beds involve, in part, the failure of the law to also clearly direct the Department of Health to not require licensed nursing homes to comply with boarding home construction and life safety requirements. Additionally, by Department of Health regulation, outside health care services cannot be provided to residents in semi-private rooms which limit the nursing services that are otherwise made available to assisted living residents residing in private rooms.

Summary of Bill: Certain restrictions are removed that discourage nursing homes from providing enhanced adult residential care. Licensed nursing homes that choose to be licensed as boarding homes for the purpose of providing enhanced residential care can be deemed to be in compliance with the boarding home building code and life safety requirements. The Department of Health is directed to allow outside health care services to be provide in semi-private rooms.
