Background: The Family Support Act of 1989, Jobs Opportunities and Basic Skills Program (JOBS), requires every state which participates in the Aid to Families with Dependent Children Program (AFDC) to provide comprehensive employment and training programs for AFDC applicants and recipients. States which have statutory authority to provide employment and training programs for AFDC recipients must comply with the Family Support Act of 1989. In 1990 the Legislature authorized the Department of Social and Health Services to provide general assistance benefits to women who relinquish their baby for adoption. The benefits will continue for six weeks after the birth of the child.

Applicants for public assistance who own real property over the amount allowed for eligibility purposes, may receive assistance if they make a good faith effort to dispose of the property.

Summary of Bill: Existing statutes relating to the Community Work and Training Program are repealed and replaced with language authorizing the Department of Social and Health Services to operate a Job Opportunities and Basic Skills Training Program consistent with the Family Support Act of 1989. General assistance benefits to women who relinquish their baby for adoption are extended from six weeks following birth to the end of that month. The applicants for public assistance who own real property over the amount allowed for eligibility purposes, may receive assistance for nine months if the applicant complies with procedures for disposing of real property.
