Background: The Department of Social and Health Services' Office of Fraud Investigations (OFI) investigates fraud in all department programs. OFI attempts to detect fraud through investigating recipient overpayments and welfare applications containing apparent discrepancies. OFI also conducts vendor fraud investigations and internal investigations for other departments.

Prior to last year, the office investigated employee fraud as well. However, this task was transferred to the Washington State Patrol (WSP) through an executive order issued by former Governor Lowry.

In carrying out its duties, OFI has the power to issue subpoenas, serve process of law and take testimony. OFI investigators have the same access to DSHS records as other staff of the department. When investigators find evidence of criminal fraud, the evidence is turned over to a prosecutor to pursue.

Summary of Bill: The Office of Chief Investigator is created in the Department of Social and Health Services (DSHS). The chief investigator is appointed by, and is under the supervision of, the secretary of the department. The office's mission is to investigate allegations of abuse and fraud in all DSHS programs, except for provider fraud in the Medicaid program. The chief investigator is also responsible for conducting and recommending programs for improving prevention and detection of fraud, and to respond to citizen complaints.

To enforce its mandates, the Office of Chief Investigator has the power to execute warrants and services of process issued by courts, issue and serve subpoenas, take testimony under oath, enter into contracts for private audits, refer investigations to the state auditor, and request assistance from federal, state, or local governmental agencies. The office also has the authority to enforce penal laws associated with DSHS programs. Substantial evidence of a violation of state or federal law is referred to the appropriate prosecutor's office. The chief investigator may access all records and materials available to the department that are not legally restricted from disclosure to the chief investigator.

The chief investigator will submit a report regarding the activities of the office to the Legislature and the secretary of the DSHS by November 30, 1997, November 30, 1998, and biennially thereafter.

The WSP has jurisdiction over all investigations concerning DSHS employees who have allegedly committed a gross misdemeanor or more serious offense, or who have allegedly disregarded department policies. The DSHS will provide training to WSP investigators in handling welfare fraud investigations.
