Background: A person convicted of the illegal killing or possession of wildlife must reimburse the state in amounts specified in statute. These reimbursements are deposited in the Public Safety and Education Account.

Summary of Bill: The Legislature finds that wildlife is of great ecological, recreational, aesthetic, and economic value to the people of the state. The Legislature also finds that the illegal taking and possession of certain valuable wildlife species is increasing at an alarming rate and that the state should be paid restitution for the loss of individual members of these wildlife species.

The amount of required restitution is increased for the illegal killing or possession of moose, mountain sheep, mountain goat, elk, deer, black bear, cougar, mountain caribou, grizzly bear, and other wildlife species classified as endangered by the Fish and Wildlife Commission. New restitution categories are established for trophy animal deer, elk, and mountain sheep, and a new subsection defines what constitutes a trophy animal.— A person assessed a restitution for the illegal killing or possession of wildlife will have his or her hunting license revoked and all hunting privileges suspended until the restitution is paid.

Appropriation: None.

Fiscal Note: Available.

Effective Date: Ninety days after adjournment of session in which bill is passed.

Testimony For: Up to one-fourth of our big game wildlife is being taken illegally. Several states have increased their fines and reduced poaching. These animals are being taken just for their trophy status. This bill could provide a deterrent. The bill brings value to wildlife, though the penalty amount is still low compared to market values. Illegal hunting steals money away from local economies. Sportsmen catch the brunt when there's illegal hunting. Poachers aren't hunters; they're businessmen.

Testimony Against: It might be good to also take away hunting privileges until the fine is paid. A different fee schedule could be considered. There are some technical problems with the wording in the existing law.

Testified: Representative Gary Alexander, prime sponsor; Sgt. Dan Brinson, Department of Fish and Wildlife; Mike Neil, Washington Game Warden Association; Greg Schirato, Washington Association of Professional Biologists; and Dick Gates, sportsman (all in favor); and Yvonne Pettus, Office of the Administrator of the Courts (con).
