Background:

Washington's major business tax is the business and occupation (B&O) tax. This tax is imposed on the gross receipts of business activities conducted within the state. There are 10 different rates that apply to various classifications of business activities. Businesses are taxable according to the activities they engage in and therefore may be subject to more than one tax rate. Under the B&O tax, there are no deductions for raw materials and wages of employees. However, there are many exemptions and deductions for specific types of business activities, and approximately 10 types of tax credits permitted under the B&O tax statutes, including tax credits for new job creation, small businesses, and research and development activities.

Public and privately owned utilities, and certain other businesses, are subject to the public utility tax instead of the B&O tax. Like the B&O tax, the public utility tax is applied to the gross receipts of the business. The principal difference between the B&O tax and public utility tax is a higher rate schedule applied under the public utility tax.

The Workforce Training and Education Coordinating Board (Workforce Training Board) was created to make the state's workforce training and education system more efficient and coordinated, more responsive to the needs of business, workers, and local communities, and more accountable for its performance.

Summary of Substitute Bill:

The Workforce Training Board must create a program to close the skills gap. This includes creating partnerships with business and labor, as well as working with the State Board for Community and Technical Colleges (SBCTC) and other training providers to develop programs that address the skills needs and expand the use of skills standards and customized training. The Workforce Training Board is responsible for accrediting the skills training programs and must maintain a directory of qualified programs.

A B&O tax credit is provided for state-approved, employer-funded skills training. The skills training is limited to direct expenditures made to upgrade the skills of the employer's existing workforce, in a job class covered by the Fair Labor Standards Act, at a training institution accredited by the Workforce Training Board. This tax credit is not available for tuition reimbursement programs, except at those institutions accredited by the Workforce Training Board.

An employer may receive a tax credit for 50 percent of its workforce training payments. It is limited to $5,000 per employee per calendar year and an employer maximum of $100,000 per calendar year. The annual state workforce training tax credits is $1,000,000. Amounts in excess of the yearly employer or state maximum may be carried over for up to five years.

The workforce training tax credit is available for the public utilities tax, but the same workforce training payment cannot be used to obtain tax credits for both the public utilities tax and the B&O tax. Payments used to obtain a job training services credit under RCW 82.04.4333 may not be used to take a B&O tax credit for the same payment.

The application for the tax credit must be submitted to the Department of Revenue after the workforce training payment has been made, and must include an affidavit of compliance. All workforce training payments made before the effective date of this legislation are ineligible.

Substitute Bill Compared to Original Bill: The substitute clarifies the organizations that will receive the grants and how the skills gap grants will be used.

Appropriation: None.

Fiscal Note: Requested on January 17, 2000.

Effective Date of Substitute Bill: The bill contains an emergency clause and takes effect on July 1, 2000.

Testimony For: Closing the skills gap is vital to the economic development of this state. There is a shortage of skilled workers, especially those with vocational training. Moreover, many of the unfilled jobs have high wages. The bill encourages employers to invest in their existing workforce. It also promotes the collaboration of labor, post-secondary institutions, workforce training boards, business and industry to address an issue that will continue in this new century.

Testimony Against: None.
