Brief Title: Extending court supervision of children subject to youth-at-risk orders.

HB 1349 - DIGEST

Authorizes the court to continue court supervision up to two hundred seventy days past the date the review hearing was commenced if the court finds that continuing court intervention and supervision are necessary to assist the parent to maintain the care, custody, and control of the child.

Declares that, at the end of a period of continued supervision, the court shall hold a review hearing. At the review hearing, a parent may move the court to continue court supervision of the child for up to one year. The court may extend its supervision of the child if the court finds that continuing court intervention and supervision are necessary to assist the parent to maintain the care, custody, and control of the child. In all review hearings held under this section, the court shall determine whether the parent and child are complying with the dispositional plan, and the court may modify the dispositional plan.
