Background:

The National Board for Professional Teaching Standards (NBPTS) is an independent, nonprofit, nonpartisan organization that provides advanced, voluntary certification for experienced teachers. The board was created as a way for the teaching profession to recognize highly accomplished teaching practice. A certificate awarded by the board is intended to show that a teacher has been judged by his or her peers as one who meets high and rigorous professional standards. The NBPTS is governed by a 63 member board of directors, of whom a majority are classroom teachers. The organization is funded through gifts and grants from foundations, corporations, individuals, the U.S. Department of Education, and the National Science Foundation.

The board certifies teachers in 21 fields using a rigorous process of assessment and evaluation, for which those seeking certification pay a fee. The standards used in the process are developed by committees of teachers and other experts, and structured around student developmental levels and subject areas. There are about 68 educators with NBPTS certification teaching in Washington.

The 1999-00 biennial budget provided funding for a 15 percent salary bonus for teachers who obtained NBPTS certification before or during the 1999-2000 school year. The bonus was intended to provide recognition for the teachers' outstanding performance. The 2000 supplemental budget provided a bonus of $3,500 for NBPTS teachers who obtained certification before or during the 2000-01 school year. The 2000 budget language stipulated that the bonuses are not included in pension calculations. In addition, the 2000 budget included a statement that the legislature intends that teachers certificated by the board be limited to two bonus payments.

Summary of Bill:

Public school teachers who obtain certification from the National Board for Professional Teaching Standards after the 2000-01 school year will receive an $8000 recognition award. For the life of the certificate, the teacher may continue to receive an $8000 supplemental contract in any year in which the teacher is selected by his or her school district to mentor other teachers while the teacher continues his or her classroom teaching duties.

By August 1, 2004, and periodically thereafter, the Washington Professional Educators Standard Board (PESB) will review the NBPTS's certification standards to determine whether the standards are rigorous and aligned to student achievement. The PESB will also determine whether additional requirements are needed to ensure that the national standards meet the needs of Washington's students.

By October 15, 2010, The PESB will report to legislative committees on the results and accomplishments of the recognition awards, including the mentoring component. The report may include recommendations for the continuation, modification, or elimination of the awards.

The authority to offer awards expires on July 1, 2012.
