(1) There is a substantial relationship between the petitioner and the child;

(2) The petitioner has been unreasonably denied visitation with the child by a parent, custodian, or other person with primary decision-making authority over the child; and

(3) There has been a significant change in circumstances with either the child, the petitioner, or the parent, custodian, or other person having primary decision-making authority over the child that threatens the substantial relationship between the child and the petitioner.
