Staff: Bill Perry (786-7123).

Background:

Under legislation enacted in 1994, courts are given explicit authority to order that ignition interlocks or other devices be installed on the cars of certain drivers. Ignition interlocks are alcohol analyzing devices designed to prevent a person with alcohol in his or her system from starting a car. Other "biological or technical" devices may be installed for the same purpose. If a court orders the installation of one of these devices, the Department of Licensing (DOL) is to mark the person's driver's license indicating that the person is allowed to operate a car only if it is equipped with such a device.

In some instances, the installation and use of interlocks are required following a period of suspension or revocation of a driver's license. Those instances are cases in which a person has been convicted of or given a deferred prosecution for drunk driving. Use of a device is required for specified periods of time following the restoration of the person's driver's license. For first, second, and third required uses, the periods are respectively one year, five years, and ten years. An interlock is also required as a condition of receiving a temporary or occupational license during a drunk driving-related suspension.

The driver's license of a person who is required to use an ignition interlock is marked by the DOL to indicate the required use.

It is a misdemeanor crime for a person who is required to use an interlock to drive without one. It is also a gross misdemeanor crime for a third party to knowingly assist such a restricted person to drive without an interlock. The law does not, however, explicitly make it a crime for a restricted person to disable a device or to ask someone else to disable a device.

Summary of Bill:

If a person is restricted to driving only with an interlock device, it is a gross misdemeanor for that person to tamper with the device, or to request a third party to tamper with the device, in order to circumvent the device.

The definition of "ignition interlock device" is amended to clarify that any biological or technical device that is to be required under the ignition interlock law must be certified by the state patrol.
