Hearing Date: 3/5/05

Staff: Bernard Dean (786-7130).

Background:

On January 13, 2005, the state Supreme Court held that the Department of Corrections (DOC) "is required to physically convey all the personal property of convicted persons, which is held in the custody of DOC superintendents, to the receiving superintendent when such convicted persons are transferred between DOC institutions."

Previously, the DOC's policy was to transport two boxes of offender property free of charge when an offender transfers from location to location. The Department excluded a number of items from the two-box limit, including state-issued transport and clothing bags, typewriters, musical instruments, electronics, and medically-issued items. All other excess property was the responsibility of the offender and was either shipped at the inmate's expense, donated, or destroyed. The Supreme Court ruled that this policy violated the state statute that required the DOC to deliver an offender's property to them when they are released from the confines of an institution as a result of being paroled, transferred, or discharged.

The Supreme Court's decision in Burton makes DOC physically and financially responsible for transporting offender property. The additional shipments are estimated to cost an additional $330,000 per year.

Summary of Bill:

The DOC is provided the authority to determine the types and amounts of property that convicted persons may possess in department facilities. Additionally, the DOC may determine what property will be transported between institutions or to other jurisdictions at the agency's expense.

If a convicted person fails to pay the costs of transporting any excess property within 90 days from the date of transfer, the excess property will be presumed abandoned and may be destroyed in accordance with the law.

A clarification is made that specifies that the DOC will deliver all funds and valuable personal property to an offender when they are released from the custody of the department to community placement, community custody, or community supervision.

Appropriation: None.

Fiscal Note: Requested March 4, 2005.

Effective Date: The bill contains an emergency clause and takes effect immediately.
