Staff Summary of Public Testimony:

(In support) The Pacific chorus frog was chosen because it resides on both sides of the Cascades and in all counties of Washington. This bill has allowed students to engage in the democratic process. Every student in the class has been involved in the process. The project has included lessons in biology, persuasive writing, art, research, and politics.

Washington has many state symbols, but no state amphibian. It is important that Washington designate a state amphibian because there are so many amphibians in the state. Sixteen other states already have state amphibians. The Pacific chorus frog is the most widely distributed amphibian in Washington. The Pacific chorus frog is charming and makes beautiful sounds. It is useful because it eats insects, including mosquitoes.

(Opposed) None.
