Background:

This analysis was prepared by non-partisan legislative staff for the use of legislative members in their deliberations. This analysis is not a part of the legislation nor does it constitute a statement of legislative intent.

If a prosecuting attorney receives a report from law enforcement of an alleged offense, the prosecutor screens the complaint to determine whether there is juvenile court jurisdiction over the alleged offense and whether there is probable cause to believe that the juvenile committed the offense.

If the prosecutor determines the case is legally sufficient, the prosecutor is required to divert the case if the alleged offense is a misdemeanor, gross misdemeanor, or violation and the alleged offense is the offender's first offense or violation.

When the case is referred to Diversion, the juvenile will sign a contract in which the juvenile agrees to fulfill certain obligations in lieu of prosecution. These obligations may include restitution, community service, and counseling as well as other possible obligations. If the offense is very minor, the diversion counselor may counsel the juvenile and release him or her from further obligation. This is known as a counsel and release.

If a diversion contract is signed and the juvenile fails to follow the terms of the contract, the contract may be terminated by the court and the case re-referred to the prosecuting attorney to decide whether to file formal charges and bring the juvenile into the court system.

If the juvenile completes the terms of the contract, the juvenile's obligation ends and the offense is reflected on the juvenile's criminal history.

The juvenile's history in the official juvenile court file is open to the public unless the file has been sealed by court order or destroyed. A person's juvenile record may be destroyed in only the following circumstances:

(1) if the person who is 18 years of age or older requests the court destroy his or her record, the criminal history consists of only one diversion, and two years has passed since the diversion was completed;

(2) if the person who is 23 years of age or older requests the court destroy his or her record, the criminal history consists of only diversion referrals which have been successfully completed, and there are no criminal proceedings pending against the person; or

(3) if the juvenile justice care agency has developed routine procedures for destroying records when two years have elapsed since the completion of the agreement and the person who is the subject of the information or complaint has turned 23 years of age or older or the person is 18 years of age and his or her criminal history consists of only one diversion agreement.

Summary of Substitute Bill:

The criminal history records of a person who is 18 years of age must be automatically destroyed if the criminal history consists of only one diversion or a counsel and release which was successfully completed and there is no restitution owing in the case.

EFFECT OF SENATE AMENDMENT(S):

The Senate amendment requires all records maintained by any court or law enforcement agency, including the juvenile court, local law enforcement, the Washington state patrol, and the prosecutor's office, to be automatically destroyed within ninety days of becoming eligible for destruction.

Juvenile records are eligible for destruction when the person who is the subject of the information or complaint is at least eighteen years of age; his or her criminal history consists entirely of one diversion agreement or counsel and release entered on or after the effective date of this act; two years have elapsed since completion of the agreement or counsel and release; no proceeding is pending against the person seeking the conviction of a criminal offense; and there is no restitution owing in the case.

The Senate amendment permits the criminal history of a person to be destroyed if the person is eighteen years of age and his or her criminal history consists entirely of one diversion agreement or counsel and release entered prior to the effective date of this act, and that two years have elapsed since completion of the agreement or counsel and release.

Appropriation: None.

Fiscal Note: Available.

Effective Date: The bill takes effect 90 days after adjournment of session in which bill is passed.

Staff Summary of Public Testimony:

(In support) This bill is almost identical to the one passed out of the House last year that ran out of time and died in the Senate. This bill is a matter of fairness. If a juvenile completes a deferred disposition it is removed, but a diversion stays on a person's record. Diversions deal with kids who commit very minor offenses. Often this is the biggest deal the family has ever dealt with and they just want to put it behind them. Eighty-one percent of youth who go through diversion never come back. The youth never returns to juvenile court and they forget about it until the youth is trying to join the military, get a job, or get a scholarship to school. Ninety-five percent of youth never have their record sealed. Only records where there is one diversion and no restitution owing can be destroyed. Last year we heard from a youth who received an engineering degree and was offered a job as an engineer, but lost the offer when his criminal history revealed a diversion when he was a young boy.

(With concerns) If the purpose is to remove criminal history, this doesn't destroy all the criminal history. It doesn't destroy the records of law enforcement.

(Opposed) None.

Persons Testifying: (In Support) Representative Roberts, prime sponsor; and Charles Shelan and Jim St. Ours, Community Youth Services.

(With concerns) Martha Harden Cesar, Superior Court Judges Association and Washington Association of Juvenile Court Administrators.
