Background:

Real Estate Broker Licensing

A real estate broker is a person who acts on behalf of a real estate firm to perform real estate brokerage services under the supervision of a designated broker or managing broker. Real estate brokerage services include:

- listing, selling, purchasing, and renting of real estate, as well as negotiation of those transactions;
- advising buyers, sellers, landlords, and tenants in connection with a real estate transaction;
- collecting, holding, or disbursing funds in connection with a real estate transaction;
- performing property management services, including marketing, leasing, renting, physical maintenance, administrative maintenance, and financial maintenance of real property, as well as supervision of such actions;
- issuing a broker's price opinion; and
- advertising real estate brokerage services.

This analysis was prepared by non-partisan legislative staff for the use of legislative members in their deliberations. This analysis is not a part of the legislation nor does it constitute a statement of legislative intent.

To be licensed as a real estate broker, an applicant must be at least 18 years, have a high school diploma, complete 90 hours of approved instruction in real estate, pass an examination, complete a background check, and pay a fee.

The real estate broker licensing law contains numerous exemptions. For example, trustees, accountants, public employees, storage facility owners, escrow agents, and people hired by designated or managing brokers to perform property management functions are exempted from the law.

Homeowners', Condominium, and Unit Owners' Associations

A homeowners' association is a legal entity with membership comprised of the owners of residential real property located within a development or other specified area. A condominium or unit owners' association is comprised of condominium unit owners. Homeowners' associations and condominium and unit owners' associations may regulate the use, maintenance, and modification of common areas; impose and collect payments for the operation of common areas; and hire managing agents and other employees.
