Background: The Legislature enacted statutes governing farm labor contractors in 1955.

A farm labor contractor (FLC) is an individual or organization that for a fee recruits, employs, or hires agricultural workers. Agricultural workers are employed in producing or harvesting farm or nursery products, or in forestation or reforestation of lands. Farm labor contractors must be licensed by the Department of Labor and Industries (L&I), pay a fee, show proof of insurance, and post a bond. Civil or criminal penalties are provided for violation of this act. The Director L&I is responsible for enforcing various requirements and prohibitions relating to farm labor contractors. The Director can also bring suit upon a surety bond on behalf of a worker whose rights have been violated or seek to prohibit someone from acting as an FLC in violation of the law.

Currently, when L&I receives payment from FLCs, the money is deposited in a local bank.
