Background:

Assault.

Generally, a person commits Assault if he or she: (a) attempts, with unlawful force, to inflict bodily injury upon another; (b) unlawfully touches another person with criminal intent; or (c) puts another person in apprehension of harm.

The crime is divided into four degrees depending on the manner in which it was committed or the amount of harm caused to the victim. For instance, an assault that would normally be considered Assault in the fourth degree (a gross misdemeanor offense), may be elevated to Assault in the third degree (a seriousness level III, class C felony offense), if the assault was committed against a certain class of persons. For example, an assault against a firefighter performing his or her official duties at the time of the assault is automatically Assault in the third degree. Similar provisions exist for assaults against transit operators, school bus drivers, law enforcement officers, health care providers, and court-related employees.

An offender convicted of Assault in the third degree may receive a maximum sentence of five years in prison, a maximum fine of $10,000, or both imprisonment and a fine for the class C felony offense. Assault in the fourth degree is a gross misdemeanor offense punishable by a sentence of up to 364 days in jail or a maximum fine of $5,000, or both imprisonment and a fine.

Aggravating Circumstances.

Generally, the standard sentencing range is presumed to be appropriate for the typical felony case. However, the law provides that, in exceptional cases, a court has the discretion to depart from the standard range and may impose an exceptional sentence below the standard range (with a mitigating circumstance) or above the range (with an aggravating circumstance). The Sentencing Reform Act (SRA) provides an illustrative, but nonexclusive, list of mitigating circumstances which the court may consider with regard to imposing an exceptional sentence below the standard range. The statute also provides an exclusive list of aggravating circumstances which the court may consider an aggravating circumstance or which a jury may consider in imposing an exceptional sentence above the standard range.

Crimes Against Persons. The standards for prosecutorial discretion in the SRA contain a list of "crimes against persons." Some of the crimes on this list include: Aggravated Murder; Murder 1, 2, and 3; Manslaughter 1 and 2; Kidnapping 1 and 2; Rape 1, 2, and 3; Robbery 1 and 2; Arson 1; Burglary 1; and Assault 1, 2, and 3.

If a crime is designated as a crime against persons additional restrictions may be imposed on the convicted person at sentencing. Such restrictions include that the convicted person cannot have his or her record of conviction cleared, may be subject to a mandatory term of community custody, and his or her earned release may be limited.

Summary of Bill:

Assault.

An assault that would normally be Assault in the fourth degree may be elevated to Assault in the third degree, if the assault offense was committed against a person in any area of a building that is used in connection with court proceedings. The crime also includes other areas in the vicinity of court proceedings which include: courtrooms, jury rooms, judge's chambers, offices and areas used to conduct court business, waiting areas, and corridors adjacent to areas used in connection with court proceedings. The covered areas also include common areas of ingress and egress to the building that is not used in connection with court proceedings.

Aggravating Circumstances.

The list of aggravating circumstances that a jury may consider when imposing an exceptional sentence above the range includes felony "crimes against persons" except for an Assault in the third degree offense that occurs in any building that is used in connection with court proceedings.
