Staff Summary of Public Testimony:

(In support) Palouse Falls is a famous and unique waterfall created by a glacial flood. It is over 10,000 years old. Palouse Falls is a series of three waterfalls and the two smaller falls lead into the main drop, which is 198 feet long. It has sparkling water, colorful basalt rock, and is located several miles away from any town. Being away from civilization helps keep the falls pristine. Palouse Falls is a great place to hike and has marmots, eagles, and wild flowers. The falls are located in semi-arid desert and in the summer the green grasses are abundant and the water is beautifully crystal clear.

According to the internet, Palouse Falls was named sixth on the top 10 best United States waterfalls list and tenth on the list of the world's most amazing waterfalls. Palouse Falls holds a world record for a kayak drop. In 1841 it was discovered on the Lewis and Clark expedition. The Indian Big Beaver legend is about Palouse Falls and in the legend, a beaver's death created the falls. Last year, over 100,000 people visited the waterfall and it is known world-wide.

(Opposed) None.
