Background: State law defines lobbying as the attempt to influence passage or defeat of legislation by the state Legislature, or to influence certain actions by state agencies. Agencies may spend public funds for lobbying, limited to providing information, communicating official business, or advocating an official position or interests to elected officials or officers or employees of any agency.

State agencies spending public funds for lobbying must file quarterly reports with the Public Disclosure Commission (PDC). Reports must include names and salaries of all who lobbied, the nature of the lobbying, and time spent and expenditures incurred.

For PDC reporting purposes, lobbying does not include certain state agency activities, including in-person lobbying by agency employees or officers for up to four days during any three-month period and in-person lobbying by elected officials on behalf of the agency or in connection with the official's powers, duties, or compensation.

A court may impose civil penalties and sanctions for violation of lobbying laws.

Summary of Bill: Each state agency director who knowingly fails to file required lobbying reports is subject to personal liability in the form of a civil penalty of $100 per report. These penalties are in addition to any other civil remedies or sanctions imposed on the agency.
