Background: Washington law authorizes organizations to be created in many forms. Examples of organizations include a partnership, limited partnership, corporation, limited liability corporations (LLCs), etc. Organizations may choose to restructure their form. A conversion is a statutorily authorized process that allows an organization to change its form through a single filing with the Secretary of State. The converted entity is the same entity with a new form. All property owned by the converting organizations remains vested with the converted organization. All debts, liabilities, and other obligations continue with the converted organization. All the rights, privileges, immunities, powers, and purposes continue with the converted organization.

Washington law authorizes an organization to convert to and from a limited partnership. This conversion process is specific to a limited partnership. Washington law does not authorize a similar conversion process specific to other organizations such as corporations and LLCs.

Summary of Bill: Conversion is authorized for an organization to and from an LLC, and also to and from a domestic corporation. The conversion provision excludes certain entities such as nonprofit corporations, miscellaneous corporations, and governmental or quasi-governmental organizations. Conversion is authorized in a single filing with the Secretary of State. A converted organization is the same entity that existed prior to the conversion and retains all of its assets, liabilities, debts, and obligations. For a converting LLC, a plan of conversion must be consented to by all members of the LLC. For a converting domestic corporation, a plan of conversion must be adopted by the corporation's board and approved by the corporation's shareholders entitled to vote.
