Legislation enacted in 2009 and 2010 requires domestic employers of foreign workers and international labor recruitment agencies to provide disclosure statements to foreign workers referred to or hired by a Washington employer. The disclosure statement is not required in certain circumstances.

The disclosure statement must:

- be in English or, if the worker is not fluent or literate in English, another language that is understood by the worker;
- state that the foreign worker may be considered an employee under state law, is subject to state worker health and safety laws and laws on overtime and work hours, and may be eligible for workers' compensation and unemployment insurance;
- include itemized listings of the agency's fees and the employer's intended deductions from pay for food and housing;
- state that the foreign worker has the right to control the worker's travel and labor documents at all times, with some exceptions; and he or she may be a victim of trafficking.

The Department of Labor and Industries (Department) has authority to and has posted a model disclosure form on its website. The Department must also integrate information on assisting human trafficking victims in posters and brochures, which must include the toll-free number of National Human Trafficking Resource Center.

An employer or agency that fails to provide the disclosure statement is civilly liable to the foreign worker.

"Domestic employers of foreign workers" are persons residing in the state who recruit or employ a foreign worker to perform work in the state. International labor recruitment agencies are entities that do business in the United States and offer employment referral services involving foreign workers by acting as intermediaries between employers and foreign workers. Foreign workers are persons who come to the state based on an offer of employment and hold a nonimmigrant visa for temporary employment.
