Background: International labor recruitment agencies and domestic employers of foreign workers must provide a disclosure statement to foreign workers who have been referred to or hired by a Washington employer. The disclosure statement must:

- be in English or, if the worker is not fluent or literate in English, another language that is understood by the worker;
- state that the worker may be considered an employee under the laws of the state of Washington;
- state that the worker may be subject to both state and federal laws governing overtime and work hours;
- include an itemized listing of any deductions the employer intends to make from the worker's pay for food and housing;
- include an itemized listing of the agency's fees; state that the worker has the right to control the worker's travel and labor documents, subject to federal law; and
- include a list of services or a hotline the worker may contact if the person thinks the worker is a human trafficking victim.

employment and education-based visa categories. International labor recruitment agencies and domestic employers of foreign workers are not required to provide the Washington disclosure statement if the foreign worker has been provided the federal informational pamphlet. A worker is presumed to have been provided the pamphlet if the federal law requiring the pamphlet is in effect and the worker holds an A-3, G-5, NATO-7, H, J, or B-1 personal or domestic servant visa.

An international labor recruitment agency or domestic employer that fails to provide the disclosure statement to any foreign worker is liable to that foreign worker in a civil action. The court must award a prevailing foreign worker an amount between $200 and $500 or actual damages, whichever is greater, and court costs and attorneys' fees. The court may also award other equitable relief.
