Senate Committee on Law & Justice

Background:

The Sentencing Reform Act (SRA) is used to determine the sentence for a person who has been convicted of a felony. The SRA assigns a determinate sentence range, taking into account the seriousness level of the offense and the offender score. The seriousness level is a statutory severity designation of the offense. The offender score is calculated based on the convicted person's criminal history.

In a typical felony case, the standard sentence range is presumed to be appropriate. However, the SRA allows the court to impose a determinate sentence outside the standard sentence range if there are substantial and compelling reasons to justify an exceptional sentence. An exceptional sentence may be below the standard range if there are mitigating circumstances. The sentence may be above the standard range if there are aggravating circumstances.

The SRA provides an exclusive list of aggravating circumstances that may support an exceptional sentence above the standard range. Generally, the facts supporting an aggravating circumstance must be proven to a jury beyond a reasonable doubt.

Summary:

The statutory list of aggravating circumstances is expanded. It is an aggravating circumstance that the current offense involved an assault of a utility employee of any publicly or privately owned utility company or agency, who was engaged in official duties at the time of the act. Official duties include the maintenance or repair of utility poles, lines, conduits, pipes, or other infrastructure, and connecting, disconnecting, or recording utility meters.
