Background:

The Derelict Vessel Removal Program (DVRP) is administered by the Department of Natural Resources (DNR). Under the DVRP, certain authorized public entities, including the DNR and most public agencies that own or manage aquatic lands, may take custody and dispose of abandoned or derelict vessels on aquatic lands within their jurisdiction. The owner of an abandoned or derelict vessel is responsible for the cost of removal and disposal of the vessel.

Before an authorized public entity may take custody of a derelict vessel, the public entity must take certain steps, including:

- mailing notice of its intent to obtain custody of the vessel at least 20 days prior to taking custody;
- posting notice of its intent clearly on the vessel for 30 days; and
- publishing its intent at least once in a newspaper of general circulation for the county in which the vessel is located.

Summary of Substitute Bill:

Notice of intent to obtain custody of a derelict vessel must be mailed 10 days, rather than 20 days, prior to taking custody of the derelict vessel.

Notice of intent must be posted on the derelict vessel 15 days, rather than 30 days, prior to taking custody of the derelict vessel.

Notice of intent no longer needs to be published in a newspaper prior to taking custody of the derelict vessel.

Appropriation: None.

Fiscal Note: Available.

Effective Date: The bill takes effect 90 days after adjournment of the session in which the bill is passed.

Staff Summary of Public Testimony:

(In support) The 30-day waiting period before a public entity may take custody of a derelict vessel is a little too long. It is not good to have a boat tied to the dock for a month when it is clearly an abandoned vessel.

One marina in the central Puget Sound region attracts thousands of vessels each year, many of which end up being derelict vessels. These vessels pose a threat to staff and to users of the marinas. The 30-day waiting period exacerbates the risk posed by these vessels.

It is valuable to have the provision of the bill that would allow for emailing the notice of intent to take custody of a derelict vessel. The 15-day notice period in the bill will help clean up public nuisances. The derelict vessel removal program (DVRP) should be expanded to apply to more than public entities; it should also apply to private properties, such as private tidelands or private marinas.

The bill makes the DVRP process more efficient while protecting due process rights. There are a few technical changes that would be helpful.

(Opposed) None.
