Background:

Unemployment Insurance and COVID-19 Relief.

The unemployment insurance (UI) system, administered by the Employment Security Department (ESD), is designed to provide partial wage replacement for unemployed workers when certain conditions are met. In response to the COVID-19 pandemic, Congress enacted several temporary, now-expired UI benefit programs under the Coronavirus Aid, Relief, and Economic Security Act (CARES Act) and other legislation. These temporary UI benefit programs extended the number of benefit weeks a claimant could receive under certain conditions. Benefits under one of the programs, the Pandemic Unemployment Assistance, were payable for weeks of unemployment beginning on February 2, 2020, through September 4, 2021.

Overpayments and Interest.

When an individual is paid UI benefits that the person was not entitled to, the ESD must issue an overpayment assessment explaining the reasons for and the amount of the overpayment. The ESD must impose interest of one percent per month on the outstanding balance if the individual fails to repay the overpayment and fails to arrange a repayment plan.

The Commissioner of the ESD has discretion to waive overpayments if the overpayment was not a result of fraud, misrepresentation, willful nondisclosure, or fault attributable to the individual, and collecting the overpayments would be against equity and good conscience. Under federal guidelines, CARES Act overpayments may be waived if the claimant is not at fault and equity and good conscience standards are met. Until an overpayment is waived, interest continues to accrue.

Summary:

Overpayment assessments for unemployment insurance benefits paid during the week beginning February 2, 2020, through the week ending September 4, 2021, will not be charged interest until January 1, 2025, unless the individual received payments due to fraud. If an individual previously paid interest on overpayments for benefits paid during those weeks, the ESD may either apply those payments toward any principal balance, penalties, or interest owed by the individual or may refund those payments to the individual.
