Background: Parents have a legal duty to financially support their children. Child support is money paid by a parent to a party taking care of the children to help support the children. Child support obligations are established through the court or an administrative process with the Department of Social and Health Services (DSHS).

The DSHS Division of Child Support (DCS) is responsible for administering the state's child support enforcement program and provides services to establish, modify, and enforce child support orders. DCS also collects child support from parents when the child is either receiving public assistance or is in foster care. Both federal and state law authorize DCS to enforce child support obligations through various means including taking withholding actions against a responsible parent's wages and earnings, as well as placing a lien on assets and benefits, like insurance claim payments. DCS may release an administrative support lien or return seized property if the debtor gives adequate assurance of payment.

An insurance company that issues either a one-time lump sum or an installment payment over $500 directly to a claimant for a bodily injury, wrongful death, workers' compensation, or life insurance claim must verify whether the claimant owes past-due child support to DSHS or to a person receiving services from DCS.

To determine whether a claimant owes a debt and to verify their identity, all insurance companies must provide minimum identifying information about the claimant to:

- an insurance claim data collection organization;

This analysis was prepared by non-partisan legislative staff for the use of legislative members in their deliberations. This analysis is not part of the legislation nor does it constitute a statement of legislative intent.

- the federal office of child support enforcement or the child support lien network; or
- DCS.

If it is determined the claimant owes child support and the insurer receives a notice from DSHS identifying the amount of debt owed, the insurer must withhold the amount specified and remit the amount to DSHS within 20 days.

Summary: Insurance companies shall provide minimum identifying information on a claimant to DCS, in a manner satisfactory to DSHS. DCS shall minimize the use of directly reported social security numbers unless the claimant cannot be identified using the claimant's full name, current physical address, and date of birth.
